What is a Zoetrope?

It's one of the earliest animation devices that produces the illusion of movement. Within the zoetrope, there is a series of drawings displaying a progression of a particular movement. When the device is spun, the images come together to reveal the object in a looped action.

Long strips of paper with drawings depicting consecutive actions are placed in the cylinder.

The cylinder has slits that allow viewers to look through and also helps prevent the images from blurring together.
